The region population has a higher median age (48 years) than the province of BC (42 years), most likely because it is an attractive region for retirees, and many younger people leave the area seeking employment.

Affordable housing is an issue for various segments of the population, particularly those people with modest incomes. There is a sense that a growing number of families rely on a family member to seek employment elsewhere (e.g. Alberta energy sector) to afford the standard of living that they seek. Wages for skilled employment in the Shuswap are often comparably low.

Public transit options in the region are predictably lacking, particularly for people living in outlying areas from employment centres such as Salmon Arm. Effective public transit often requires a population size to support the public expense to serve these people with the frequency and capacity that serves their needs. Innovative ride share programs may be a useful alternative.

The Shuswap region's popularity as a vacation destination, combined with a noted gap in material wealth across BC and Canada, has impacted real estate in the region and the proportion of full time versus temporary residents. This was most evident in Sicamous with some people witnessing growing social division between permanent and temporary residents.

The use of electronic media to access regional library materials grew substantially in the past 2 years. This may demonstrate benefit for regional residents as opportunity to borrow materials has expanded, and benefit for library administration as this form of learning may prove cost efficient.

The trail network established and nurtured by the Shuswap Trail Alliance is a noted model for the province of BC. The trail system can potentially support several Vital Signs issue areas---getting around, health and wellness via recreation, economy via tourism visits, environment via nature appreciation, and belonging and leadership via volunteering and social connection.

Shuswap Lake and its watershed are fundamental to the quality of life in the region. The watershed significance is noted in the natural and cultural history of aboriginal and non-aboriginal peoples of the region. Only in the past decade however was there investment to assess and monitor the balance of human activity with non-human activity toward sustaining all life that makes the region an attractive and abundant place to live.
